In a city with most of its action happening a few hundred feet up, you'd expect more places from which to enjoy it all. Thankfully, hot on the heels of the great High Line - the abandoned raised rail track now turned a green space in the sky - comes the first New York outpost from Yotel. Along with the minimalist touches you'd expect, one area - the roof terrace - isn't compacted. The largest in NYC, it features two bars, a pagoda, a fire and complimentary blankets, so you can enjoy the view all year round.
